

Brandt Carter is a fourth-generation farmer and rancher from Lacadena, Sask. Even as a four-year-old, he knew his passion was ag. He began working on the family ranch as a youngster, always looking for opportunities to learn and grow.

In 2017, he graduated from the University of Saskatchewan, completing a Bachelor of Science in Agribusiness. He is an active operator in his family business, which consists of a 200-head commercial Black Angus cow/calf enterprise, combined with 6,000 acres of cropland. He also started his own business when he entered a rental agreement to farm 480 acres of cropland and recently purchased another 320 acres in 2018.

Brandt believes in the power of cattle to fertilize, improve and regenerate the land, and often has cattle running on his cropland.
